

How to Build Community Resilience

“A resilient community is one that works together to enhance the personal and collective capacity of its citizens and institutions to respond to, and influence, the course of social and economic change.”
Canadian Centre for Community Renewal

From responding to disasters to promoting social and economic wellbeing, Community Resilience is essential in dealing with today’s challenges. Work with us to:

- Understand what community resilience building is and why it is important.
- See how you can use it to improve your existing work practices.
- Get useful contacts, tools and resources.

Choose an option that suits you:

- Introductory Training Day
- Tailored planning sessions
- Sessional consultancy support on planning, implementing and evaluating Community Resilience Building.

WHAT YOU WILL WALK AWAY WITH

Tools For Resilience

After working with Celia and her team you will have:

- Practical support and guidance.
- New tools and skills.
- Concrete plans.
- Confidence in the evidence supporting your work.

Training and support is based on a range of evidence sources - from ecological to psychological - Giving Irish and international examples.

Here’s what some participants had to say:

“Very informative and useful in terms of the project I am working on”.

“The first thing we tend to do is look at what we don’t have in our communities. It’s been useful to see how to harness the resources that are already there”.

“There’s a lot of deficits in our community which we have to address and that scares me, but less so now so thank you, its been very valuable”.

We are a social enterprise offering social innovation consultancy:

Our vision is to enable those working for civic wellbeing to maximise knowledge, ideas and research by bridging the worlds of community, funding, academia, policy and practice, and business.

Services include:

Project management

Research and evaluation

Education and training

Networking and facilitation